NYC'S BEST BURGERS IN SURPRISING PLACES

IN A FRENCH BISTRO

Little Frog Bistro & Bar – Upper East Side

The thick patty in Little Frog Bistro's "Frogger Burger" ($23) is the result of a blend from Pat LaFreida meat purveyors, who use only whole cuts of meat. The sharpness of Cabot cheddar is cut by the sweet maple bacon and charred red onions, whose acidity is welcomed in the presence of a decadent French choron sauce. A little bit of crunch and a whole lot of juice come with a delectable hunger-quenching bite out of the Frogger Burger. The toasted bun is not to be brushed off either – it has the perfect amount of puff to envelope the masterpiece. So how does a French bistro have one of the best burgers in town? This may have something to do with the fact that Executive Chef Xavier Monge was a sous chef at Minetta Tavern (home of the famous Minetta and Black Label burgers) before opening Little Frog.
